

GOVERNMENT AND POLITICS, DOCTOR OF PHILOSOPHY (PH.D.)

Students are required to complete 42 credits of coursework, in addition to 12 credits of GVPT899. The doctoral program is intended to provide students with the knowledge, methodological skills and research experience appropriate for persons who intend to enter the discipline of political science. Students must complete 42 hours of graduate work including courses in political theory and research methods and pass written comprehensive examinations in two fields. Although formal coursework and field examinations are important components of the doctoral program, the research component, especially in the form of the dissertation, is paramount. Consequently, students who are able to demonstrate an interest in quality research activities and desire to become creators as well as consumers of knowledge are appropriate for the doctoral program.

Advance to Candidacy: In addition to course requirements, students are also required to complete two comprehensive exams, a research paper, and pass the Prospectus Defense.

Post-Candidacy: Complete at least 12 credits of GVPT899 as well as successfully defend and submit an original dissertation.
